1. From 3 through 9 April 1953, source almost daily observed [REDACTED] each of them loaded with 25 or 30 VP personnel who wore red-bordered black epaulets proceeding from Oranienburg Castle to the target range near the Klinker Works. Source observed for the first time that the VPs wore epaulets with an A on them. In the noon hours of 7 April, ten BMW sedans entered the castle.

2. In early April, [REDACTED] a skilled worker employed at Oranienburg Castle that work on the reconstruction of the front section of the installation was to be accelerated and that another 1,000 VPs were expected to be moved to the installation after its completion.

4. From 10 through 16 April, source made the following observations at the former Sachsenhausen concentration camp:
Buildings Nos 115, 117 and 120 housed 12 canvas covered trucks; building No 157 housed six such trucks.
Buildings Nos 110, 111, 112 and 113 were locked at all times; they allegedly housed tanks.
Buildings Nos 131 and 133 quartered personnel who wore claret and red-bordered black epaulets.
Buildings Nos 121, 123 and 125 quartered personnel with blue and green epaulets.
Two kitchens, one mess hall and one day room were established in building No 129. During the reported period, a small kitchen and a small mess hall also available in this building were still being used by Soviets. West of building No 129, the Soviets established a board fence 3 meters high running in a right angle to the camp street. Another board fence under construction extended from Bernauer Allee in north direction to building No 134, then west of the Promenade, to the camp street. Building No 144 was inside that fence, while buildings Nos 137 and 139 were outside the fence. Source believed that the commanding officer of the unit or another high-ranking officer was billeted in building No 136 because a sentry had been posted in front of this building since 11 April 1953.²
